Return to nature soil
Many of us choose to scatter or bury ashes in a place that we loved to visit with them. We often don't realise that we could be harming the environment, as ashes alter the pH of garden soil and can prevent plants from growing. When ashes are mixed with Return to nature soil, it neutralises them and makes the soil nutrient-rich. You can then plant a memorial tree, scatter them in nature or add them to a flower bed without creating harm to their surroundings. Our team will carefully mix the soil and ashes together, and all you need to do after you've collected them is to wait for three months before you find the perfect place to scatter or bury them.
